About the Program

In today's economy, healthcare providers face constant changes in consumer demand, the regulatory environment, reimbursement, and technology. The Master of Healthcare Administration (MHA) program provides students with the knowledge and skills needed to plan, market and provide high-quality services. Teaching methods include cases, discussion groups, experiential projects, and more.

Points of Pride

- The MHA Program is a member of the Higher Education Network (HEN) of the American College of Healthcare Executives (ACHE).
- Flexibility - You can complete this graduate degree in as few as three semesters with the option to take classes entirely online, or opt for some face-to-face courses.
- Our program has a robust board of advisors made up of industry professionals across all levels of healthcare administration. Our advisory board works with us to maintain a competency-based curriculum to develop industry-ready graduates.

Put Your Degree to Work

By 2028, healthcare occupations are projected to add about 1.9 million jobs; that is more jobs than any other category of occupations. Business leaders specially trained for this vital job sector are needed to drive innovation and provide administrative management for healthcare organizations large and small.

Note: While salaries vary depending on several factors, including your level of experience, education and training, and geography and industry, here is a sampling of the future job growth and salaries in this area.

Examples of Occupations	Median Pay	Entry Level	Job Growth through 2029
Medical & Health Service Managers	$104,230 per year	$56,600 per year	32% (139,600 more jobs)
Administrative Service Manager	$98,890 per year	$62,500 per year	9% (28,600 more jobs)
Top Executive	$107,680 per year	$97,300 per year	8% (209,500 more jobs)
